

I listen to AIR1 on a translator at 89.3 in Las Vegas, Nevada. I have heard that a new proposed service called LPFM could eliminate translator based stations in favor of local low power stations of unknown content. AIR1 is a station that my family can listen to without profanity or violence as the overriding theme. There are already plenty of radio stations in the Las Vegas market that families cannot listen to without being offended by sexual content espoused by D.J.'s and violent wording to the "music" played on those stations. If AIR1 is replaced by a LPFM station it will almost certainly be of a different format than AIR1. Families can listen to AIR1 with no mention of abusing women or killing police officers as so many "songs" these days promote. The public is best served by a wide variety of content on the airwaves as long as there is balance. One radio station's format and ability to be allowed to broadcast in a market should not be eliminated simply because it is not generated locally.
